

A Life in Poems
by William C. Wright

“Simple passion, remarkable clarity, precise insights mark this record of picket lines, devoted love, tough choices, steadfast activism, deep pleasures and powerful truths. This is a record to be wholly admired: one decade after another of reliable observation and intensely felt emotion. Wright has always woven experience into wisdom.”

Another Life:
Collected Poems
By Allen Frost

“I wish you could have seen me reading these poems of Another Life for the first time . . . A slight smile I didn't even know was there surprised me. Ridiculously, I began making check marks in the margins of individual pages, as if I might never see them again. Now it's difficult to find a single page I did not leave my mark on, and the other way around.” —Tom Kryss

Faces & Voices Tales
by Larry Smith

“What these monologues, letters and phone calls share is an urgency; with only the bare truth to guide them, Smith's characters struggle to make some sense in the world, through telling their stories, they succeed.”

—Bonnie Jo Campbell

Depression Days on an Appalachian Farm: Poems
by Robert L. Tener

“Robert Tener's early years on a farm in southern Ohio and his later years of teaching, travel, and deep-hearted living turned him into a poet whose best work is muscular and tender and bursting with life. Tener builds poems the same way he once built a house for his family—with his own two hands, one brick and one board at a time.” —Steven DaGama

Winter Apples Poems
by Paul S. Piper

"So this is what Paul Piper has been up to, walking the dog, spying from trees, meeting mountains, testing the water, writing it down for us to see. Now you can know. You've picked up a book like a stone from a river. You're lucky you found this beauty, turn it round, open the seams and read."

120 Charles Street:
The Village
Journals & Writings
By Holly Beye

Because this is a journal, written day-by-day, it has an immediacy, a sense of being there, of sharing in the daily struggle to make ends meet while being part of the flow of kindness, fun, courage, rebellion and intense creativity that marked that time and place...We are fortunate these lively, perceptive journals survived, along with their writer."

—Betty Ballantine, Editor and Publisher
"This volume of daily journal entries by Holly Beye gives us a tactile, gritty, moving portrait of one year in that singular strata of Village life. . . . Lives lived with honesty and courage, like Holly Beye's, are an exemplar to us all."

256 Zones of Gray Poems
by Rob Smith

"Inspired by nature in his thoughtful and plain-spoken poems, Rob Smith reminisces and reflects on life, death, and the passage of time in 256 Zones of Gray.

He takes us 'Along the Shore,' and we see barren trees through his eyes when the sky threaded/a blue ribbon between the trunks and a postcard moment in "Pittsburgh" when colors sliding back into the rivers/define the Point. Smith's words often give us hope, a lighted window on the edge of color."
